WELCOME TO THE OF THE ASD GIN BROCHURE.

Thanks to the interest in cocktails, a desire for more low-calorie drink options and the increase in innovative and exciting gins on the market, the juniper-based spirit has become the on-trend tippie of choice in the UK.

SO WHAT IS GIN EXACTLY ?

Simply, it's a flavoured alcohol with juniper as the predominant botanical, but you can add other botanical ingredients too. This means the main botanical/flavouring must be juniper, the base alcohol must be made from something natural such as wheat, barely, rye, molasses, potatoes or grapes, and there must be at least 37.5% of pure alcohol in the total volume of liquid.

London Dry Gin is the highest-quality gin you can produce. It has to have all natural ingredients, be made with high-quality alcohol and only contain 0.01g of sugar per litre of alcohol. It has to be distilled with botanicals to get the flavour, and you can't add any artificial flavourings or additives after distillation. Despite the name, London Dry Gin is simply a style and doesn't need to be made in England's capital. In fact, it can be made anywhere in the world. Distilled Gin is essentially made in the same way, except for one big difference: distilled gin can have any flavourings added to it after the distillation process. This means that while the gin must still be distilled with botanicals, you can add artificial or non-artificial flavourings, essences and more sugars if you wish. With more and more exciting new craft distillers on the market, there are plenty of non-London Dry Gin varieties to taste.

While gin is, by definition, flavoured, there has been a rise in lower-strength, sweet gin based liquers such as Violet, Rhubarb, and Ginger.

Sloe gin is a red liqueur made with gin and sloe (blackthorn) drupes, which are a small fruit relative of the plum. Sloe gin has an alcohol content between 15 and 30 percent by volume.
